

On identity

I don't deny the facts.

I know that children are shaped by their parents.

I know that teens are shaped by their peers.

I know that deep down, everyone prefers cats over dogs.

But what I do deny?

The idea that you can't change that.

The idea that one's identity is determined, forever fixed.

Identity is you trying out what feels right.

And if it doesn't feel right anymore?

Then it is about you discarding that.

Shaw: "Life isn't about finding yourself. It is about creating yourself. "

And if this means that you happen to become a dog person that's fine with me too.
